HOPE MURALS USES URBAN ARTS PLATFORM TO ENGAGE TEENS AT MIAMI YOUTH ACADEMY

With support from The Carrie Meek Foundation, teens at Miami Youth Academy, a Florida Department of Juvenile Justice residential facility, recently completed the HOPE Murals program which reflected the personal stories, struggles and aspirations of each participant.

HOPE Murals uses an urban arts platform to engage young people in an interactive experience of self-reflection and the artistic expression of HOPE. Their group workshops center on self-esteem, self-reflection, self-awareness and motivation. Leaders from Miami-Dade County Public Schools, TrueCore Behavioral Solutions, and Juvenile Justice Probation and Community Intervention joined us to strategize how to deliver more programs like this during that critical period before youth return to the community.

Encouraging mindfulness in decision-making and self-expression can help our youth find their hope, self-actualize and make healthier choices for their future. We are proud of these young men and grateful for HOPE Murals founder German DuBois for leading this important work in our community.
